

Courses Description

College: Arts

Department: Humanities & Social Sciences

Course ID: 107711 Description: Introduction to Peace and Conflicts

Full Course Description: The Foundation Course in Peace and Conflict Studies is designed to engage students in an examination of the major contemporary challenges to peace, sources of conflict and violence and several key nonviolent mechanisms for conflict transformation and prevention. During the course, an understanding of the complex and interconnected challenges to peace will be developed, as will an understanding of the need for multi-faceted approaches to meet these challenges. Participants in the course will engage critically with various theories of conflict and violence. They will develop their understandings of the theoretical resources available in the area of peace and conflict studies as will as their

Course ID: 107712 Description: Practices of Conflict and Management

Full Course Description: This course examines the changing nature of contemporary conflict and the practices techniques used in conflict management. It engages the question of the roots of conflict in greater depth and also explores the range of options for responding to conflict including negotiations, conflict resolution activities, in the role of the UN, the role of peace operations and the challenges of peace building activities. A primary focus of the course is an examination of the capacity and potential of various cultural conflict resolution and transformation practices. The course also covers trigger events, ripeness theory, feature of effective and ineffective peace process, and post conflict justice and r

Course ID: 107713 Description: Hard and Soft Conflicts in the Middle East

Full Course Description: This course is a survey of actual cases of conflicts such as territorial disputes, insurgency, resurgence, guerrilla war, international war, nuclear proliferation and terrorism as well as soft conflicts such as environmental issues, water, refugees and intellectual rights.

Course ID: 107714 Description: Strategic and Security Studies in the Arab World

Full Course Description: This course deals with the different concepts of strategy with special emphasis on their development, in particular, in the aftermath of the cold war period. it also deals with those concepts on a local , regional and international level to the relative view of the concepts between great, middle and small states, it deals with the challenges facing the nation states and the strategies to approach them.

Course ID: 107715 Description: Islamic Perspective of Peace and Conflict Resolution

Full Course Description: This course is an advanced survey intended to introduce students to a sampling of peace concepts, theories and approaches of conflict resolution from an Islamic perspective. It deals with the Islamic perspective to violence, terrorism, war and other related issues of international wars and disputes and tools of peace reconciliation.

Course ID: 107717 Description: Water, Security and Peace in Jordan

Full Course Description: This course will explore conflict, insecurity and collaboration in relation to scarcity, poor quality, and variability of freshwater resources in Jordan. An overview will be provided of current and projected future state of freshwater resources. Students will examine disputes and conflict over access to fresh water resources and rivers, including dam construction in the region. Throughout the course, mechanisms and instruments will be introduced to assist the resolution and prevention of water-related conflict and insecurity including, international law, institutional arrangements, policy reform, dispute resolution, track-two dialogues, environmental monitoring systems, early warning system

Course ID: 107721 Description: Research Methods

Full Course Description: This course develops students theoretical knowledge and applied skills in conducting qualitative, quantitative and participatory research in the social sciences. It addresses, inter alia; epistemology, critical theory, research ethics and project development and grant writing. The course serves to prepare for the design and writing of the major research project required for their degree through the development of their abilities to formulate research problems and proposals and to conduct research.

Courses Description

College: Arts

Department: Humanities & Social Sciences

Course ID: 107731 Description: Multiculturalism

Full Course Description: The major assumption of this course is that humans can learn and change their acquired behaviors and beliefs. Human behavior is mostly transmitted from one generation to another via cultural means of socializations (for example, militarization and education are essential institutions in this context). Categorization and identify labeling is one of these powerful means to establish boundaries and justify both violence and cooperative relationship. This course such aims to develop further understanding of the role of cultural, ethnic, religious, gender, linguistic and other forms sub identities in creating peaceful environment. Students will learn concepts and frameworks to analytically link t

Course ID: 107751 Description: Sustainable Development in the Arab World

Full Course Description: This course explores the concept of sustainable development. The three pillars of sustainable development - economic development, environmental protection, and social development - will be introduced. Basic concepts of ecological economics cost-benefit valuation techniques will be presented and applied. The roles of local people, government, and private, national, and bilateral aid agencies will be examined as constraints against the implementation of sustainable development models. Sustainability issues related to the Middle East, such as aging of populations, sustainable consumption, institutional adjustments, and managing growth, will be emphasized.

Course ID: 107771 Description: Jordan Law and Societal and Organizational Conflicts

Full Course Description: This course is intended to introduce students to a sampling of conceptual approaches, theories and models constructed to help interpret and make sense of Jordan's law and various types of societal and organizational conflicts including actual cases of refugees, investments, child labor, international labor and international criminals; It reviews Jordan's model of law and justice in these areas of research.

Course ID: 107799 Description: Thesis

Full Course Description: The course trains student in planning and implementing scientific research through the selection of a research topic in the field of peace and conflict studies and implementing it according to appropriate procedures. The students prepare a research project prior to the third semester of his/her study. Upon approval of his/her supervisor, the student proceeds with his/her research, analysis of results, and writhing final thesis. The student defends his/her research in the presence of an assigned examining committee. Also, the student is required to attend 3 credit hours training at one of the governmental, nongovernmental, and international organizations which are related to his/her researc

Course ID: 3107799 Description: Thesis

Full Course Description: The course trains student in planning and implementing scientific research through the selection of a research topic in the field of peace and conflict studies and implementing it according to appropriate procedures. The students prepare a research project prior to the third semester of his/her study. Upon approval of his/her supervisor, the student proceeds with his/her research, analysis of results, and writhing final thesis. The student defends his/her research in the presence of an assigned examining committee. Also, the student is required to attend 3 credit hours training at one of the governmental, nongovernmental, and international organizations which are related to his/her researc

Course ID: 6107799 Description: Thesis

Full Course Description: The course trains student in planning and implementing scientific research through the selection of a research topic in the field of peace and conflict studies and implementing it according to appropriate procedures. The students prepare a research project prior to the third semester of his/her study. Upon approval of his/her supervisor, the student proceeds with his/her research, analysis of results, and writhing final thesis. The student defends his/her research in the presence of an assigned examining committee. Also, the student is required to attend 3 credit hours training at one of the governmental, nongovernmental, and international organizations which are related to his/her researc

Courses Description

College: Arts

Department: Humanities & Social Sciences

Course ID: 9107799 Description: Thesis

Full Course Description: The course trains student in planning and implementing scientific research through the selection of a research topic in the field of peace and conflict studies and implementing it according to appropriate procedures. The students prepare a research project prior to the third semester of his/her study. Upon approval of his/her supervisor, the student proceeds with his/her research, analysis of results, and writhing final thesis. The student defends his/her research in the presence of an assigned examining committee. Also, the student is required to attend 3 credit hours training at one of the governmental, nongovernmental, and international organizations which are related to his/her researc

Course ID: 1714011711 Description: Introduction to Peace and Conflicts

Full Course Description: This course focuses on the major contemporary challenges to peace, sources of conflict and violence, and the major mechanisms of conflict transformation and prevention, and develop an understanding of the complex and interconnected challenges to peace; as well as developing multi-faceted approaches to meet these challenges. The course engages critically with various theories of conflict and violence and applies such theories into practice through a wide-angle perspective.

Course ID: 1714011712 Description: Islamic Perspective of Peace and Conflict Resolution

Full Course Description: This course deals with the concept of peace and its conditions from an Islamic perspective. It also explores the Islamic perspective to violence and its implications connected with attitudes, behaviors and the structural environment. It deals with the Islamic vision and the civilized Islamic approaches towards disputes' settlement, tools, mechanisms and values that the Islamic perspective provides to dispute management through the various stages of conflicts and disputes development.

Course ID: 1714011721 Description: Practices of Conflict and Management

Full Course Description: This course examines the changing nature of contemporary conflict and the practices techniques used in conflict management. It engages the question of the roots of conflict in greater depth and also explores the range of options for responding to conflict including negotiation, conflict resolution activities, in the role of the UN, the role of peace operations and the challenges of peace building activities. A primary focus of the course is an examination of the capacity and potential of various cultural conflict resolution and transformation practices. the course also covers trigger events, ripeness theory, feature of effective and ineffective peace process, and post conflict justice and reconciliation. Case studies at the local, social, national, regional, and international level is used throughout to examine the complex way conflict dynamics emerge and interact with social, environmental, economic, political and other factors

Course ID: 1714011722 Description: Hard and Soft Conflicts and Wars

Full Course Description: This course is a survey of actual cases of conflicts such as territorial disputes, insurgency, resurgence, guerrilla war, international war, nuclear proliferation and terrorism as well as soft conflicts such as environmental issues, water, refugees and intellectual rights.

Course ID: 1714011723 Description: Water, Security and Peace

Full Course Description: This course focuses on issues of water conflict, instability and cooperation with regard to the scarcity of drinking water sources, limited water resources, border rivers and development projects related to water use such as dams, agricultural and industrial projects, and the means and procedures used to prevent conflict over water resources.

Courses Description

College: Arts

Department: Humanities & Social Sciences

Course ID: 1714011731 Description: Sustainable Development in the Arab World

Full Course Description: This course explores the concept of sustainable development and three pillars of sustainable development, economic, environmental and social; and focuses on the basic concepts of economic development based on cost-benefit assessment and the practical application and the impact of environmental problems such as global warming. Identify the role of individuals, governments, public and private sectors and civil society organizations in activating models of sustainable development in addition to the emphasis on sustainable development issues in the Arab world.

Course ID: 1714011732 Description: Jordan Law and Societal and Organizational Conflicts

Full Course Description: This course is intended to introduce students to a sample of conceptual approaches, theories and models constructed to help interpret and make sense of Jordan's law and various types of societal and organizational conflicts including actual cases of refugees, investments, child labor, international labor and international criminals; It reviews Jordan's model of law and justice in these areas of research.

Course ID: 1714011733 Description: Multiculturalism

Full Course Description: This courses deals with the cultural, ethnic, religious, linguistics roles and types of social identities on its implications in creating an environment for peace. In addition to acknowledging the importance of prejudice, intolerance and direct and indirect institutional discrimination and its role in provoking social, cultural and political violence, and to seek ways to discover mechanisms and tools to address cultural and ethnic differences.

Course ID: 1714011741 Description: Strategic and Security Studies

Full Course Description: This course deals with the different concepts of strategy with special emphasis on their development, in particular, in the aftermath of the cold war period. it also deals with those concepts on local, regional and international levels and on the state-size levels (large, middle and small). The course focuses on the major theories in this discipline and the most important security and strategic challenges facing the nation states.

Course ID: 1714011751 Description: Research Methods (1): Methods of Scientific Research and Quantitative Approach

Full Course Description: This course focuses on developing theoretical knowledge and applications of research skills by designing qualitative and quantitative researches of a common nature in social sciences, developing capacities and skills to prepare and design scientific research, and develop skills to write the thesis.

Course ID: 1714011752 Description: Research Methods (2): Research Methods in Conflict, Peace and International Relations Studies

Full Course Description: This course deals with the most important methods and approaches used in political science and international relations, and in the science of conflict studies and peace and how to apply them in scientific research. As well as how to analyze political and international issues using various methods such as: decision making, game theory, systems approach, deterrence theories, the methodology of state unity, the nonviolence approach, and others.

Course ID: 1714011799 Description: Thesis

Full Course Description: The student will write a specialized thesis under the supervision of one of the faculty members in the department, in accordance with the recognized scientific principles and in accordance with the instructions of the university.